

PART TWO OF THE SIGNS OF A MYSTERY

Still recovering from the injuries sustained on Antarctica, Siobhán has returned to Britain, finding it difficult to reconnect with the world she left behind just before the holidays. Her anxiety increases with the discovery that Alison has not been in contact with anyone for almost a month. Convinced that her absence is not what it seems to everyone else, Siobhán is determined to find her. And so, being on sick leave from work, she begins her own search.

Soon she realises that, to uncover the truth, she will have to follow in the footsteps of Alison's investigation into the murder of Kathleen, even if getting too close to that crime may be the real reason for Alison's disappearance.

As Siobhán weaves her way through an increasingly confusing and unsettling world of rumours, myths, and legends, reality appears to be slipping away from her. And instead of finding the answers to her current questions, she is confronted by the ghosts of a forgotten past.
